Abstract

There are many people in Poland at present, who are interested in the Turkish language. There are professionals who are interested in Turkish culture, politics, and literature. The need to know a foreign language is a must and a fact that is inevitable. The teaching of Turkish in Poland is recognised by such institutes as the University of Warsaw, the Jagielloonian University in Cracow, and the Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznan. Recently, private tutoring has become more and more common. This is a study of the views of Turkish language instructors who have been working in Poland for many years and, who are experienced in the teaching of Turkish.

1. Introduction

This paper will discuss that the knowledge and the teaching of the Turkish language began in the second half of the 15th century when Poland and Turkey began to have closer relationships. In accordance with the transmission of the Polish chronicler Gall Ananin in 1414, King Władysław Jagiełło sent his envoys Skarbek z Gory and Gregorz Ormaman on a diplomatic mission. With the development of bilateral political relationships, came military and commercial relationships between the two countries. These were realised through letters or notes in the oriental language - namely the Turkish language - both in
